Roosevelt, Under Heavy Fire Only Month Ago Wins on Three Fronts

WASHINGTON — In the past month Franklin Roosevelt has staged a remarkable comeback—political and economic. Just a month ago rebellion was stirring in the Farm Belt, Wall Street was guffawing at "the rubber dollar," industry was storming against the NRA, and the Republicans, in great glee, were sharpening their axes for the opening of Congress.

This criticism now has materially subsided. Roosevelt has won a remarkable victory, and he has won it on three fronts—the NRA, the farm, and the gold front.

1. THE NRA. The flight of the Blue Eagle is a lot steadier now. This is due to two things.

First, General Johnson came back from his trip West in a more conciliatory mood, has been giving industry virtually what it wanted since. This may or may not be a good thing for the public, but it has helped appease industry. Second, industry, quite aside from this, has come to see that the NRA is a real asset. It only takes two figures to illustrate this. Industrial production dropped 25 per cent between July and Nov. 1, but despite this fact, purchasing power increased 16 per cent. This was what won industry over to the Blue Eagle. Factory owners suddenly woke up to the fact that John D. Rockefeller's insistence on higher wages had given a new impetus to mass purchasing power. They laid off some men, but sold more goods. Also industry has found that it is weather the effects of a slump better than before. The Textile Industry, hit by the post-July slump curtailed production 25 per cent, but was distributed equitably among all plants. Under the old cut-throat system, no equitable curtailment would have been possible.

Results: Such hard-boiled, conservative outfits as the National Coal Association, the Iron and Steel Institute, and even the Manufacturers' Association have endorsed the NRA.

2. THE FARM SITUATION. It still causes concern, but the walls have been reduced to murmurs. Agricultural prices average one-third higher than during the dreary end of the Hoover days, but still have a long way to go before Roosevelt reaches his coveted goal of 1926 prices.

However, Roosevelt told the American Farm Bureau Federation last week that "we seem to be on our way." The Federation gave him an enthusiastic vote of confidence.

3. GOLD. The President's biggest comeback is with his gold-buying policy. These who scoffed are more quiet. Many still do not approve, but are now anxious not to rock the boat. Also between what they hear from Frank Vanderlip and what they hear from Jimmy Warburg, they hardly know what to believe—and so are willing to give Professor Warren and his commodity dollar a chance.

The real Roosevelt phenomenon was to have F. M. Law of Houston, President of the American Bankers Association, declare that there was nothing wrong with gold-buying. He gave the President a big hand. Even the staid old U. S. Chamber of Commerce which had described the gold-buying plan as developing "widespread confusion and disquiet," has had to change its tune.

What Wall Street chiefly realizes is that Roosevelt's mild inflation through gold-buying, already has headed off the wild yell for greenbacks which Congress was preparing to make.

Merry-Go-Round

Larry Richey, Hoover's ex-secretary, does not say much about the New Deal, but remarked recently: "Harold Ickes is a little close about releasing government funds—but maybe that's to the public interest." It has just leaked out that Maxim Litvinoff made a public move while in Washington to kill two birds with one stone. In addition to getting Roosevelt's recognition, he wanted to strengthen Soviet relations with the powerful but gun-shy republics of

COUNCIL MEET SUBJECT AGAIN UTILITY RATES

Engineers, Power men to Confer in Adjourned Session Tonight

STREET LIGHTS UP

Meeting May Again Be in 'Star Chamber'

"To pass or not to pass an electric street light rate ordinance under an emergency clause," that is the question council, which is fast approaching its "swan song," will again study this evening. The meeting, adjourned from last Tuesday at 12:30 a. m., is called for 8 o'clock.

Fosdick and Hilmer, Cincinnati engineers employed to make a report on local electric and water rates, will again be present to defend their report with the Southern Ohio Electric Co. also to be represented.

MAY BE EXECUTED

It loomed today that the bulk of the meeting would be in executive session with the council, engineers and utility men allowed in the chamber. The same procedure was followed a week ago when the discussion continued from 9:45 p. m. Monday to 12:30 a. m. Tuesday. Council will again meet in regular session Wednesday evening. This is to be the final meeting for four members of council, Councilmen Barnes, Neuding, Parrett and Will retiring to be replaced by W. M. Reid, Ben H. Gordon, W. F. Baker and Dan T. Ryan.

The approaching change in the council set-up is one of the issues that is causing many arguments as to whether the present council should pass an ordinance under the emergency clause or permit the new council to carry on negotiations. Many contend that the voters, with the utility issue as the big one, elected new councilmen at the last election. It is their belief that the citizens want the new council to take the necessary action. Several of the retiring councilmen assert that Councilmen Leist, Marion and Helweggen, who remain after the first of the year, expressed it as their desire that the present council carry on as far as possible.

This "utility rate debate" is one of the most important questions city council has taken up for quite a while.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 18.—The amazing Lindberghs—slim, boyish Colonel Charles A., and his diminutive wife, Anne—speed swiftly northward today, to home and their 16-month-old son, Jon Morrow Lindbergh.

"Mr. Heffner said in his letter," declared Gilmore, "that the proposed contract carried rates higher than those recommended by Engineers Fosdick and Hilmer. This is an error. The rates offered by the electric company are slightly below those recommended by the city's engineers. The engineers recommended $7,000 as the proper annual charge for street lighting for the present size and number of lights. The electric company's proposal is $11.50 below that figure and approximately $2,200 below the existing contract figure.

FIGURES CITED

"In order to cooperate with the city, the electric company recently voluntarily filed with the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio an application for a reduced schedule of rates for residence and commercial lighting in Circleville, despite the fact that its present contract for this service has two and one-half years yet to run. Approval of Emergency Clause to Bring Fight

WHITE HOPEFUL

22 Senate Votes Are Required

COLUMBUS, Dec. 18.—Hopeful of becoming a jolly Kris Kringle and stuff a liquor control law in the state's stocking as a Christmas present, members of the Ohio legislature began reassembling in Columbus today to resume their work tomorrow.

The next step in the enactment of a law to assist in the "holiday cheer" is up to the State Senate, which is scheduled to convene tomorrow morning. It takes up the control bill as passed by the House of Representatives last week.

It was expected that a vote would be reached on the measure by the Senate tomorrow night sometime after a provision has been inserted for the temporary licensing of drug shops, from the exclusive retailers of beer in packages, pending the establishment of the permanent monopoly system.

THEN TO GOVERNOR Following the senate action, the bill will be returned to the House for confirmation of the temporary sale provision and then the measure will be sent to the governor for his signature.

Enacted as an emergency measure, the liquor control law will become effective immediately upon its signing by Governor George White.

Whether the bill can be guided through the Senate as an emergency measure is a question.

Chicago Bears Win Pro Title in 23-21 Game

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—The Bears of Chicago were again professional football champions of the country today, after their thrilling 23-21 victory over the New York Giants here Sunday. The lead changed no less than six times during the four periods.

WILLIAMSPORT BOYS LOSE BY 31-22 TALLY

Put Up Good Game; Red and Black Counts First Victory of Season.

The Red and Black won a basketball game, Saturday evening, at the C. A. C. by a 31-22 score from Williamsport's varsity. The Tigers were not any too impressive in their victory, ragged passing and slow breaking being evident at many times.

Williamsport backers were delighted that the score was no larger.

Next Friday the Red and Black tangles with Ashville's team which has run up large scores in two games to date.

The local offense started slowly, Saturday, only five points being scored in the first period. Scoring was even in the second session each team getting eight counters and the half ended 13-8.

The third period found the Tigers in their best form of the evening, tallying 12 points against seven while the final quarter was gained by Williamsport, 7 to 6.

Coach Herberholz tried several combinations in an effort to find a clicking quintet. Williamsport's team was built around Bob Carter with close guarding a feature.

John Heiskell officiated.

The Club team is rapidly rounding into shape with Art Steele reported in his best condition in several years. Tubby Vlerebome will be home over the holidays and will hold down one of the forward positions, probably with Steele. Gordon will probably play a guard with Meriman at the other. Joe Barnes and Boyce Parks will alternate at center with the former probably getting the nod to start the game.

Carl Purcell will be available for forward work and Dick Robinson will be ready to play guard any time he is needed. Several other athletes are trying out for the team.

Details concerning the official, preliminary and starting time have not yet been worked out.

Americans who got a kick out of violating the prohibition law probably are finding life a little dull now.

Reserves Take Washington 5

Holding the Washington-two team to two points in the first three periods, the Tiger Reserves won a game, Saturday evening, by a 19-9 score.

Coach Herberholz, with a nice lead in possession of his team, inserted substitutes in the fourth period but was forced to jerk them when the Washington boys got hot.

Heiskell officiated this game.

and unmarried sister. Mrs. Dolack was reading her Bible.

The son stepped through the doorway and fired one shot. The bullet struck Mrs. Dolack in the heart and she fell forward, a gush of blood staining the pages of the New Testament she was reading. Instantly, George turned the gun on himself and sent a bullet crashing into his temple.

A brother, John, an unemployed painter, was outside, skinning two rabbits a friend had given him for food. He came in the house to find his mother dead, his brother dying.

Rushed to a hospital, where he lay semi-conscious for nearly 24 hours before he died, George revealed to police his firm conviction he had "acted as God would want me."

"She was dying," the boy gasped, "and it tore my heart to see her suffer so. There was nothing to eat for her and for all the seven children she had taken care of since father was killed. She often told me we would be better off dead. I believed she was right."

Liquor Taxation Fight Expected As Solons Meet

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—A still Congressional battle over liquor taxation, which may delay final enactment of the proposed measure, appeared probable today.

The proposal of the administration to enact a tax sharing plan with the states and the comparatively high rate favored by the Democratic leadership were expected to endure a bi-partisan attack.

Having urged a policy upon Congressional leaders but making no attempt to dictate the rate of taxation, President Roosevelt had opened the way for a battle which is expected to break partisan lines.

The prediction of Chairman Doughton, (D) of North Carolina of the House Ways and Means committee of a rate between $2.10 and $2.40 a gallon, means a doubling of the present tax levies.

ALREADY HAVE TAX

With the federal rate now $1.10 a gallon, many states, including New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania and Delaware, have enacted gallonage taxes of their own of approximately the same amount.

Even though the plan to share taxes with the states, and thus avoid tax competition which would force permanently high rates, is successful, it appeared likely the tax rate would be far above peacetime pre-prohibition days.

A tax of $2.20 a gallon, with 25 per cent to be distributed to states, was favored by many Democratic leaders. Under this arrangement the federal government would retain $1.65 a gallon and the states be given 55 cents.

With a production estimated at 125,000,000 gallons a year, the government would realize approximately $200,000,000 from liquor taxation, with $20,000,000 more expected from wines and licenses, and probably $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 on foreign liquors and wines.

100,000 on foreign liquors and wines.

The state-sharing plan suggested by Mr. Roosevelt is opposed almost solidly by Republicans in the House ways and means committee, with some Democrats doubting its feasibility.

OTHER TAXES, TOO

The administration urges the method not only for liquor but for many other taxes, where federal and state governments have been conceding a "race" for taxes. The cigarette industry, which has felt the burden of state taxes in the past two years, is urging a similar proposal, and it also has been advanced with respect to gasoline taxes.

Democratic leaders expected little difficulty in enactment of the tariff reciprocity features of the proposed liquor bill. Under the "double column tariff" maximum and minimum rates would be fixed, with the President having power to reduce the tariff to obtain tariff concessions abroad.

CHRISTMAS PLATE

ONE of the very nicest things one can receive at Christmas time is an attractive old plate, and it will be nicer still if it contains a few homemade cookies. Take a large square of holiday paper in a color harmonizing with the decorations of the plate, gather it together at the top, with the corners all frilled out, and finish off with a spray of mistletoe, gold or silver leaves, or a contrasting bow.

CHAPTER SIXTY

They caught sight of Pete's car ten miles from Smithville. It was ambling along at a comfortable forty and through the back window of the coupe they could see Steve hunched over as near Pete as she could get. Tommy whizzed by with a furious horn while Dorothy leaned out to wave. Steve's face broke in a wide grin as she returned the salute and Pete tooted the staccato voice of his car. He grinned at the wheel but did not wave. Pete was a careful person—and he had a new wife and a new car in his keeping.

Tommy drove along for a few miles, then slowed and waved for the others to come on. They went by slowly enough to exchange shouts of goodbye and good luck and then Pete's tail light became a little red pinpoint in the darkness, turned a curve and was gone.

"Well," Tom said slowly, "there they go."

"They're darlings," Dorothy's voice was warm and low. Tom drove off the pavement onto a dirt side road, turned the car around and paused to light a cigaret before starting back.

They talked, neither looking at the other, eyes into the darkness, at grips with a problem.

"Tom—you envy Pete tonight, don't you?"

"Well—he's set; he knows just where he's going, what he wants to do; he's married; he has things figured out ten years ahead—yes, I envy him—and I'm supposed to be the smart guy."

"You wouldn't be happy doing what Pete's doing. You're bigger than Pete, more important. He knows it—he's got sense, that kid."

"I don't see how you figure me important—the chance I had and blew it."

"No—you're wrong. Your trouble is you're heads above your own family—heads above the town. Dad has always known it—and now I can see it. You're a sort of explorer—you open up new country for your people. You've made this town college-minded, for one thing."

He did not answer. She went on: "Your trouble right now is that it was all too easy and glorious at first—you're like a man—let's say an explorer, who has been walking in his sleep and awakes in a jungle with animals all around."

"Now," she said evenly, "the question is—which way do you go from here?"

He lit another cigaret, offered her one which she declined. "I suppose," he said, "you mean that coaching job..." He hesitated.

She said earnestly: "Tom—it's only a compromise. It's on the way back. You'll never be happy going back; you'll never be satisfied. You've got to be a winner or you'll burn up."

He said, quietly, "I saw you look at Florrie tonight."

Quickly, softly, she touched a soft finger to his lips. "Do you love me, Tom?"

His fingers clutched the wheel; tears sprang to his eyes; his voice was low and husky; but he did not look at her. "That's what I wanted to say; if you hadn't stuck with me the last six months—I could have gone to ruin in eight different directions."

"I had to do it, Tom."

"I don't see why."

"That Yale game. I saw you in defeat and I saw you fight your way out of it—then, when you told me why you had done it..." That's all any girl really wants, Tom—to find a man worth clinging to; and son, I've seen you in action."

She moved impulsively to his side; he put his arm about her, smiled down at her as if he doubted her confidence. "Tom," she said, "you know you wouldn't be happy..." Remember what you told me? It's gladiatorial stuff. . . . You're bigger than that."

He pressed the starter. The engine roared.

"Is your father home?"

"Yes."

"Let's go."

"Wait."

They kissed, reverently. "Now you can start," she said.

"That will help a lot," he said warmly.

"It's supposed to," she replied; and Dorothy, all the way back, smiled into the darkness with the contented expression of a woman who had just made up a man's mind. Tommy had a very good mind and it was practically brand new. She expected to do great things with it.

Mom looked at the clock and saw it was ten minutes to six and just getting daylight so she shut off the alarm and got up quietly so they could get the last good out of their sleep. Then she dressed and put the coffee on and started to get the pancake batter ready and pack their baskets.

Then she called them; and Pop was first in the bathroom, then Tommy; and Pop came out and grunted, like he always did in the morning; and Tom came out, bright and fresh and clean in his new blue shirt and a pair of pants which a lot of people would still use for a good suit—but Tommy didn't have what you could call old clothes.

"Morning Mom," he called. "Pancakes—that's the stuff."

He seemed to be really cheery and happy and even anxious to get started. Mom still couldn't understand it but then Tommy had been doing things she didn't quite understand for a long time and they turned out all right. Of course Mom had an idea Dorothy was somewhere at the bottom of all this—then she laughed at herself and thought she must surely be getting old when she started to blaming things on the young ones. One thing Mom wasn't going to be was a stage mother-in-law. Young ones had their own way of doing things and more often than not they did what was best for them. So Mom had made up her mind.

Still, if he only could start in the office it wouldn't be so bad; of course he could have but it was Tommy's own idea to start right in the factory and learn everything from the bottom up. "That's one thing I learned from football, anyhow, Mom—you've got to know fundamentals—and the only way to really learn them is to do them—and you just forget about what the neighbors will say."

She was ashamed of herself for bothering about the gossips but she knew how they'd talk; of course Tommy would show them in the end like he always did and it wasn't everybody who had sense enough to turn down a big coaching job and start in to learn the glass business—Mom would tell them that. She'd be ready for them all right.

Pop had thought Tommy was sure crazy when he first mentioned it and Uncle Louie was so disgusted with him he wouldn't even discuss it; but Tom had sat down with Pop outside the house one night and explained everything to him real patient-like; and Pete thought it was a great idea from the start and Charlie Whitney was tickled to death and said he had been hoping for this for a long time but that it wouldn't have done any good for him to suggest it—that Tom had to be ready for it himself; and that it took a lot of will power and common sense for a young boy to make up his mind to do a thing like that; and that if he could do that now he could do other things which they needed at the factory and in the town. Charlie didn't really say anything and neither did Mom; but they both knew what he meant.

And after Pop had talked with

Tommy that time, he came in and shook his head and said, real sober-like to Mom: "Lizzie—the boy's right. He's got a good head on him. He'll be running the factory in a year." Then he had dropped that eye and said, as if he had just made up his mind to the whole thing and figured it all out himself: "Yes—I guess I'll make a glassworker out of him."

Mom looked at the clock and it was a quarter-to-seven and Pop got up and put on his coat without saying anything; so Tommy took another sip of coffee and did the same thing. Then Pop picked up his basket and started for the door. And Tommy picked up his basket and walked slowly towards the door. Mom walked with him. He could see she was still worried so he laughed and said:

"Now don't you worry about me, Mom—I never fell down on you yet, did I?"

"No, Tommy, you haven't. Now take care of yourself and don't burn your hands."

Pop was impatient and she could see he thought you could never make a glassworker out of a boy by babying him. "Come on," he said gruffly, "we got to get there before the whistle." Pop was a great one for being punctual. He was going to start Tommy in right, there was no doubt about that.

Tommy smiled, leaned down and kissed Mom quickly, and whispered, just for her to hear. "You stick with me, Mom—we'll show them."

Then he yelled at Pop, "Okay, Coach," and ran to catch up with him.

Mom stood in the doorway and nodded her head slowly. She knew what he meant. We'll show them. He knew she always had confidence in him and he wanted her to have confidence in him now. Well, she would. Idly, her mind turned to something nice to have for supper when Tom came home.

Then it dawned upon her what it really meant.

Tom was home. He was going to stay home in Athens. He was going to be her boy again and not Thorndyke or the country's.

He would be her boy and Pop's and Dorothy's and Charlie's; and the old Grandmother's boy; too. Mom had to smile a little at that—and wouldn't it be funny if, through Tommy, the Old Lady's last years might be blessed? He would be nice to her—and so would Mom.

In her apron pocket Mom's fingers were twisting the receipt for the last payment on Pete's new place—he was the first of the Scroggins to become a landowner. And what with the beer and all it even looked like the Democrats would put Roosevelt in and Uncle Louie would be postmaster after all.

And Tommy would run the factory and be the biggest man in town—mayor, if he wanted to.

These things Mom thought quickly while the two of them walked down the street. Pop so proud and Tommy so brave—Pop was a little stooped, she noticed for the first time, when she looked at him alongside of Tommy. Pete wanted him to quit the factory because it would be easier on his feet but glassworkers hardly ever did anything else and that would be admitting he was getting old—and now he would be busy making a glassworker out of Tom.

The blind moved in the house across the way but Mom didn't even bother to think about it. Just before he turned the corner Tommy stopped and waved.

And Mom waved back, standing on her tiptoes.

We'll show them, Tommy, she was saying in her mind.

Beware of Pneumonia These Changeable Days

'This Is the Season of the Year When the 'Captain of the Men of Death' Rides Abroad

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

United States senator from New York
Former Commissioner of Health,
New York City

I CAN THINK of no other disease more feared or more properly dreaded than pneumonia. John Bunyan referred to consumption as the "captain of the men of death."

Since pneumonia is a serious disease, requiring the utmost care and nursing, it is best whenever possible to send the patient to a good hospital. Here all the necessary precautions can be taken and all facilities available.

No one will deny that the prevention of pneumonia is much easier than its cure. To this end, avoid dust, dirt and smoke if you can. Keep the house well ventilated and comfortably warm. Avoid overheated rooms and drafts.

Never neglect a cold. Dress according to the weather. So far as possible avoid contact with all contagious diseases. Obtain enough hours of rest, avoid fatigue, and exposure to cold and dampness. Make sure that your diet is simple and nutritious.

If you have a cold do not neglect it. I cannot speak too strongly about the hazards of the common cold. Persistent cough, headache, fever and a general feeling of illness are signs of impending danger. Go to bed and call your physician. In this way you may prevent a great deal of unnecessary suffering and perhaps ward off an attack of pneumonia.

Often Follows a Simple Cold
Pneumonia is an inflammation of the lungs. It commonly follows a simple cold or other infection of the nose, throat or ears. Often it appears without any warning, but in most instances it can be traced to severe chilling of the body or exposure to drafts, cold or dampness. Simply passing from a warm room to cold outside air, improperly clothed to meet the change of temperature, may be sufficient to lower the vitality enough for the pneumonia germs to begin their work.

Pneumonia occurs, too, as a complication of some infectious disease. It is especially common in underweight and undernourished children, following severe attacks of measles, whooping cough, scarlet fever, and other infectious diseases. In adults, it may appear as a sequel to excessive fatigue, lack of proper food, and carelessness of the general health of the body.

Pneumonia is a contagious disease, too, and it may be contracted from another person who has it. For this reason it is best to avoid a pneumonia patient. The sufferer should be isolated and every precaution taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

The Cat That Will Not Come Back

PROCESSING TAX MAN HERE DEC. 27

Merchants and others concerned in the community will be given an opportunity to obtain the advice, and assistance of a deputy collector in the preparation of floor and processing tax returns of pork and field corn products. Deputy Collector H. L. Benton will be in Circleville at the Courthouse on December 27, 1933.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, processing taxes were levied on hogs and field corn, effective November 5, 1933. Floor tax returns of articles made of these commodities are to be filed by retailers on or before January 4, 1934.

This processing tax return for November which is to be filed by millers and persons slaughtering hogs for market must be filed in the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue, Columbus, or placed in the hands of a deputy collector on or before December 31, 1933. Any person who has not received instructions and blank forms may obtain them from Mr. Benton.

Many farmers are liable for processing tax on hogs since it is a common practice to slaughter hogs and market at least a part of the resulting pork products. Any farmer who may be liable for the tax should communicate with the Collector of Internal Revenue, Columbus, or see a deputy.

Restore Aztec Ruins

BOULDER, Colo.—The ancient ruins in the Aztec National monument area in northwestern New Mexico are to be restored under the direction of Earl H. Morris of Boulder, noted archeologist. Among the decaying structures to be restored is a stone building with more than 500 rooms. Morris has been "loaned" by the Carnegie institution to the public works administration for the job.

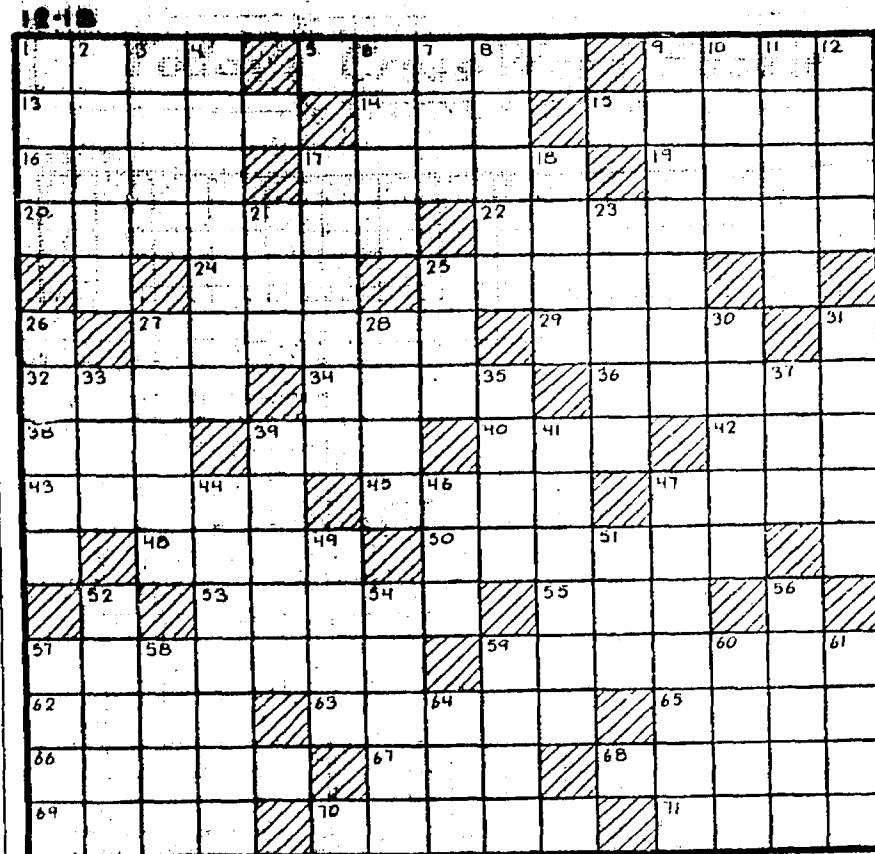

If kintolks spongle on you, that's unfair. If you are taxed to provide board for a criminal, that's justice.

Hence, it was but natural for Pryor, during his boyhood, to assume that he was to follow in his father's footsteps and become a musician.

They were recruited from honest goodness ranches, when Otto Grey and his Oklahoma Cowboys developed the idea of real cow punchers to revive the waning fame of the old time western ballads. That was seven years ago. Today, Otto Grey and his cowboys are famous from coast to coast. They have been heard over 130

Will Rogers Picks A Story For This Spot

By WILL ROGERS

IT SEEMS that this here feud business is kinda dyin' out. Time was when no back-woodsman would stray very far from his own place without his trusty shot-gun. All this leads up to a story I heard about an old "way-back-in-the-

He brought his boy into a little country school-house.

"This 'ere boy is arter larrin'," he announced. "What's yer bill of fare?"

"Well," replied the teacher, "we have Geography, Arithmetic, History, Trigonometry, and..."

"That'll do," replied the old mountaineer. "Load him up with that trigonometry. He is the only poor shot in the family."

Relief commission members disclosed, Monday, that several good projects are all that are needed to just about clean up the relief lists of the entire county citing figures to show that 600 families have been removed since the CWA program started.

ON NON-STOP TRIP

In the fuel tanks of the plane was 426 gallons of gasoline, sufficient for a non-stop flight to the metropolis.

Lindy sped down the bay almost a mile before lifting his ship into the air. Then, with a farewell swoop and dip of his wings, he rocketed northward.

His red and black plane, gleaming under a bright new coat of paint, given it here during a week-end overhaul, flashed scintillantly in the morning sun.

The ship took off from the Pennsylvania Airways base to South America at Dinner Key, several miles south of here and a few minutes later sped past the towering buildings of Miami.

For once Lindy stayed late, abed, remaining at his Miami Beach hotel until shortly after 9 o'clock. Then, with Anne, he was motored swiftly to his awaiting plane at the Dinner Key terminal, the engine already warmed up by mechanics there.

Lindy delayed his takeoff a few moments while the 44-passenger Clipper airliner, bearing Jefferson Caffery, new Cuban ambassador from the United States, to Havana thundered out into Biscayne Bay and winged southward.

What a life! Try to make a good impression and people don't remember you; make an ass of yourself and they never forget you.

Further saving of $2,200 on street lighting. Furthermore, the company has voluntarily reduced its rates for commercial power to a point saving local power consumers more than $12,000 a year.

"The members of Council, in proposing to enter into a new contract for street lighting at this time," continued Mr. Gilmore, "are merely performing their official duty. This problem has been discussed for more than eighteen months. It arose during the tenure of the present members of Council and they feel that it is their duty to complete negotiations before they turn the affairs of the city over to their successors. The present members of Council are more familiar with the problem than private citizens possibly can be and they do not feel that they should leave any unfinished business for their successors if it is possible to agree with the company at this time."

"To summarize," concluded Mr. Gilmore, "the present Council has been successful in negotiating very satisfactory agreements with the electric company and has secured for the city its home owners, its merchants and its manufacturers savings, totalling more than $21,000 a year."

CAMELS... made from finer, more expensive tobaccos

PRINCE ALBERT
THE NATIONAL JOY SMOKE

Recognized everywhere as being made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE tobaccos than any other popular brand, Camels naturally suggest themselves as the gift for any smoker. Camels never get on the nerves or tire the taste. The smoker to whom you give Camels will appreciate the mildness and satisfying flavor of those costlier tobaccos. So to give pleasure, give Camels—now on display in gay Christmas packages.

Among men who smoke pipes or "roll their own," Prince Albert smoking tobacco is known as "the national joy smoke." A special process takes out every hint of harshness or "bite"—leaves P. A. cool, slow-burning and mellow. No wonder that more men smoke Prince Albert, than any other brand. The one-pound glass humidors and one-pound tins are suitably packaged for the Christmas season.
